

Points to Ponder

ABOUT THE BOOK: Many congregations are faced with hidden dangers involving their perception of inadequacy on the one hand and having sufficiency on the other. The former often leads to the belief that a congregation lacks growth and influence simply because of inadequate human and financial resources, ministries, and programs. The latter often leads to the belief that a congregations growth and influence are due to its abundant human and financial resources or its many ministries and programs. Each view maximizes the relative importance of the congregation as a whole while minimizing the impact and importance of the individual member. What ultimately is lost is the fact that God does His work of transforming people, situations, and nations (congregations also) through individuals (few or many) who are committed to Him and dedicated to following His plan. God brought an entire nation to repentance using one reluctant, albeit obedient, prophet, Jonah (Jonah 1-4). He used one man (Joseph) to preserve a nation of people (Genesis 39-50). He used the faith of a shepherd boy (David) to defeat a giant of huge proportions (Goliath) - a victory that ultimately led to the defeat of the Philistines (1 Samuel 17). God used one committed man (the apostle Paul) to turn the mighty Roman Empire virtually upside down. This book focuses attention on the capabilities and responsibilities of individual church members that they might positively impact their congregations, their communities, and the world.----
