While this lot was passed on, those remaining amused themselves by inspecting the various objects of interest in the hall, the attendant explaining and answering the numerous questions put--many of them very silly and some quite amusing. It struck me that I would not like to be a chaperon at the Castle. There are a number of the relics of that mythical hero, Guy, Earl of Warwick, kept in the hall--the sword, shield, helmet, breastplate, walking-staff, and tilting pole, all of enormous size; horse armour, a large pot called Guys porridge pot, his flesh fork and his ladies stirrups. Besides other things, there are deers heads with enormous antlers. While passing around you would hear some feminine seeker after information questioning the attendant: I say, Mister, do you think that ever a man lived that could eat at one time all that pot would hold? Cant say, maam; they say that was his regular allowance. Three times a day? For mercy sake! Sir Guy must have been an awful strong man to handle such a sword as that. Dont you think so? He--why he was as strong as Samson. Tell me, Mister, what is that long stick there for? That is a tilting pole. A tilting pole! Whats that? A pole used in tilting. Dear mercy, but what do they do with it? Here the attendant describes briefly a tilting match. And do they really ride at one another with such great sticks as that? Yes Well, I declare, I never heard of such a thing before in all my life!--and so on. There is a beautiful view from the south windows, and a hundred feet below the Avon laves the found...
