Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: ...for woorth in true honor, they proudly bandied vaine ti-Proud Kingties, striuing which should be most Pro-/c/// digal; and thus each corrupting other, both became so distressed, that they S 3 were were compelled to retaile that which they had bought by grosse, and in the end remaine a perpetuall example of a memorable vengeance, and fo make Rome subiect to Casars Tiberius, and other tyrannies. Behold a true mirrhor which makes me see my sentence to bee iust; and that there is no plague more deadly poysonsull, then pleasure, whofe rash desires presume vpon gouernmet, and not searing to touch her facred throne, fill the land sul of treafons; the subiects sull of impietie; and in the end doth ruinate the whole state: This I might witnefle by sundrie, whofe excessiue pride and intollerable pleasures putrifying the ayre, haue filled their houses with contagion, fiered their walles, and the earth as wearie hath deuoured them vp. But that which besides these (for these I silently passe as being but the faults of some sewe) which doth make my seare to increase daily, & (like the warlike engine that ploweth surrowes in the armie) (hall batter downe the the walles of my peace (if prouision in Wtvt vn,,,... tilth the ar time preuent not so foule a mischiesse) ismourofa the hatessull discord vntying thofe sirme f wealth. knottes, which once bound my armor so faste about mee, that I contemned o-pen violence, as being too weake to en-counter mee, and scorned vndermining treacherie, as being too foolish to supplant my prosperitie. For where are now become these renowned a-mitics of our foresathers? these com-mon resolutions sometime vsuall to Happy Jans. mine
