Not illustrated. 1888 Excerpt: ... 954; and Gum, as MS. B of the Ann. Camb. calls him, but whom MS. 0 and Brut y T. call Edwyn and Etwin, probably through Saxon influence. Between the sons of Howel Dda and those of Edwal Voel great and bloody wars ensued, to the destruction of their country. But there is evidently some doubt as to the issue of Howel, since the Welsh History tells us that other writers say that his issue consisted of Owain, who did not long survive his father; Einion, Meredydd, Dyrnwal, Rhodri, and Edwin, the three last of whom were slain in the battle of Llanrwst by the sons of King Edwal Voel in 9527; Rhiin, Lord of Ceredigion, slain before his father; and Cynan y Cwn, who possessed Anglesey. With respect to the lastmentioned person, we have before shown that he was, according to others, the son of Howel ab Ieuav ab King Edwal Voel⁸; but there was also a Cynan, son of King Edwal, Lord of Anglesey, who fell in conflict with Howel Dda, who likewise overcame his son Gruffudd, and quietly possessed himself of not only Anglesey, but also the rest of Gwynedd. There is, therefore, probably a confusion between these several Cynans. We hear nothing of the daughters of Howel Dda, but are inclined to accept the statement of Harl. MS. 4181, that his daughter Angharad married Tudor, whose mother, Rhieingar, is stated to have been sole daughter and heiress of Llyddocca ab Hevaith ab Cradoc Vreichvras of Maeshevaith.¹⁰ Either this was a different Caradog Vreichvras from the early and celebrated one, or--which is very probable--for the last ab we ought to read to Caradog Vreichvras. Who this Tudor was seems very doubtful. His Welsh name was Rhodri. See YCymm., ix.
