LAMBERTS QUARREL WITH THE PARLIAMENT. 259 never loved his wife, nor she him, though they lived together near fifty years afterwards. The love of sway of this daughter of Cromwell was manifested in the eagerness she displayed to become the wife of Charles II. Lord Broghill, afterwards Earl of Orrery--who, while living with Cromwell, carried on a secret correspondence with some persons about the King--had discovered that Charles was favourable to a design of making a match betwixt His Majesty and one of Cromwells daughters, the Lady Frances. But Lord Broghill failed in all his attempts to obtain Cromwells consent to it. Upon this my Lord withdrew, and meeting Cromwells wife and daughter, they enquired how he had succeeded; of which having given them an account, he added, they must try their interest in him; but none could prevail.1 If the Lady Frances had accomplished her wish of becoming the wife of Charles Stuart, she would, most probably, have become acquainted with a somewhat disagreeable illustration of the vanity of human wishes. While, in pursuance of the O...
