I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men: for kings, and for all that are in authority. Saint Paul in his preceding discourse having insinuated directions to his scholar and spiritual son, Timothy a, concerning the discharge of his office, of instructing men in their duty according to the evangelical doctrine; (the main design whereof he teacheth to consist, not, as some men conceited, in fond stories, or vain speculations b, but in practice of substantial duties, holding a sincere faith, maintaining a good conscience, performing offices of pure and hearty charity0;) in pursuance of such general duty, and as a principal instance thereof, he doth here first of all exhort, or, doth exhort that, first of all, all kinds of devotion should be offered to God, as for all men generally, so particularly for kings and magistrates. From whence we may collect two particulars. 1. That the making of prayers for kings is a Christian duty of great importance; St. a 1 Tim. i. S. Ver. 6. c Ver. 5. 19. VOL. III. Z Paul judging fit to exhort thereto irp&rov iravrcov, before all other things; or, to exhort that, before all things, it should be performed.a 2. That it is incumbent on the pastors of the Church (such as St. Timothy was) to take special care that this duty should be performed in the Church; both publicly in the congregations, and privately in the retirements of each Christian: according to what the Apostle, after the proposing divers enforcements of this duty, subsumeth in the eighth verse: I will therefore, that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands, without wrat...
