Not illustrated. 1835 Excerpt: ...a ship repaired is the same ship, which she was before the repairs were made. From this specimen, we might, perhaps, be induced to turn with contempt from such an author. But it was the misfortune of the age, in which Stypmannus, and Loccenius, and Kuricke lived, that jurists employed a great deal of their time and talents in idle discussions upon unimportant topics, and buried matter of more worth and virtue under a cumbrous load of scholastic learning and metaphysical subtilties..Far different is the character of Roccus. He was an eminent jurist and judge at Naples, and published two tracts, (one, De Navibus et Naulo, the other, De Assecurationibus, which he modestly terms Notabilia,) which deserve, and have received the approbation of all Europe. They consist of a series of texts, remarkable for their brevity, accuracy, sound exposition of maritime law, and practical utility even in our days. His learned Dutch editor, Westerveen, has justly observed of these treatises, lisque casus quotidianos tarn breviter et absolute complexus est Roccus, tam luculenter proposuit, tam dilucide explicavit, ut omnium Scriptorum indicem seu compendium fecisse videatur. Roccus has, indeed, drawn liberally from his predecessors, and from none more frequently, or more correctly, than from Juan de He via Bolafios,f a most learned, and excellent Spanish writer of his own age, whose works deserve to be better known. But Roccus was himself endowed with a clear and comprehensive mind, and, as his select responses show, with a most acute and sound judgment. His works are of more practical use to an English lawyer, than all the other maritime works, if we except Cleirac, which had been previously published. Lord Mansfield is under no inconsiderable obligations to them, ...
