Not illustrated. 1813 Excerpt: ... Till rousd from her lethargic trance, See retribution now advance; Then caution, campd beneath our walls, At length the rabble rout appals; And Gordon nearly pays with life, The forfeit of the lawless strife Which, with most inconsiderate head, And frantic zeal of late he led. Mark, the Dutch admiral Byland yielding, To fearless British captain Fielding; Behold, where Parkers genius rises, To fill our ports with gallant prizes; These riots, the worst that ever disgraced a civilized nation, lasted from the 30th of May till the 8th of June, during which time the rioters were absolute masters of the metropolis and its environs; many chapels and houses were demolished, and their contents committed to the flames; Newgate, the Kings Bench, and the Fleet Prisons, were set on fire, and the prisoners liberated. The Bank was twice attacked, but without effect; and 36 fires were visible at one time, from an eminence near Hampstead. The numbers killed and wounded in the streets and on Blackfriars bridge, amounted to six hundred, independent of many whose wounds were privately attended, from their not wishing to have it known they had been concerned in the tumult. Several of the principal rioters were hanged at, or near the places where outrages were committed. Lord George was committed to the Tower for high treason, at first a close prisoner, but, after some time had elapsed, he had more indulgence, and was eventually acquitted on his trial? Vol. ii. Q And, And, the proud record to coinpleat, See Rodney master of Langaras fleet; Digby and Geary swell our victories, And Rodney's flag again triumphant flies Alfred the royal stock encreases; Cornwall succeeds as Mister

Speaker; All hope of peace grows daily weaker, And for a time entirely ceases.
