Set in the early 1800s England, two young women's lives are changed forever in an unexpected twist of deceit and betrayal. Lady Rachel Ramsford is promised in marriage to a disgusting, but rich old man, Lord Symington. She escapes by eloping to the United States with a handsome, young British officer she has fallen in love with, but on the voyage a terrible series of events take place that will drastically affect her future. Her cousin, Lady Edith Brekmore is blackmailed into taking Rachel's place. Forced to marry and produce an heir to the dangerous and powerful Lord Symington she contrives a plan that if discovered would mean her certain death. After chapter four each chapter starts with a letter from one cousin to the other outlining the events in their lives. The cousins, more like sisters, love each other, so when they write their letters they don't want to worry the other who is so far away and skim over the hardship or horrors they are going through. But, if they could have only read what was hidden between the lines . . .
