Not illustrated. 1867 Excerpt: ...in Russia, no order could ever be sent by any minister, and no person to whom such order was sent was justified in obeying it, unless his Imperial Majestys approbation and signature were affixed to it. The conversation, however, ended very quietly, his Imperial Majesty declaring that he did not intend to censure Lord Strangford; that he would receive him perfectly well, as he did afterwards; but he did not take from me the despatch. You will observe that Mons. de Nesselrodes note contains a new version of the Russian demands upon the Porte, which, excepting upon the commercial subject may be considered as substantially the same as the original ultimatum. I have considered it unnecessary therefore in my answer to enter into any details upon the great question of the settlement between the Emperor and the Porte, as that is properly a question to be discussed in the conferences, with a view to which we shall be assembled at Verona. I have therefore confined my note, a copy of which I enclose, substantially to the justification of Lord Strangford, and nearly to the topics which I had used in my conversation with the Emperor. I am in hopes that this note will eventually draw from the Russian ministers a reply which will set the matter right; for which I will press as strongly as I can. In respect to the main question between the Russians and the Porte there is no doubt that by this time the Principalities Oct., 1822. RUSSIAN DEMANDS ON THE PORTE. 353 are evacuated entirely; the Hospodars have been named and installed, and the other three original points of the Russian ultimatum have been admitted by the Porte, and are in the course of fair execution. But I confess that, taking into consideration the circumstances stated in another despatch which I write to you...
