

Surrey Secret

Alys doesn't expect a man of mystery and good looks to come to her aid. He gives up the convenience of his barouche to ride in her post-chaise. Alys sits sandwiched between the dark-haired stranger and his valet. Her heart flutters and she studies him when he falls asleep along the journey. The earl is put to bed at Kenward's estate. The doctor examines him, determining the earl has suffered a seizure and needs bed rest. Kenward and Alys sit eating in the breakfast parlour. At last he recognizes her last name and grows cold. Their grandfathers became estranged over political differences years earlier and the families severed all ties. Alone with Alys, Kenward realizes the compromising nature of the situation. Alys Abigail did not come on the journey due to illness, her father is unconscious, and Alys is without a family member as chaperone, in the home of a man to whom she has not been formally introduced. Kenward insists Alys has been compromised. They must marry to save her reputation. She had wanted to make a love match like her parents so she resists until shortly before her father dies. Then she relents and Kenward and she are married by special license.
