

Trip, Stumble, and Fall

Love in the time of jellyfish? Not quite, but when Caro McClure finds herself stranded for three months in a mosquito-infested salt marsh, the only consolation is that she'll be free from the complications of her love life, including the trouble that comes from dating her friends. A biologist doing summer field-work, Caro doesn't want a working partner, let alone a lover; she wants to play with her boat and count the mosquitoes. Little does she know that her job on the remote but beautiful eastern shore of Virginia will bring not one new man but two: Hugh Thomas, who shares her house and her willingness to slog through the mud in the line of duty, and Roy Robinson, a gorgeous lawyer who doesn't have to get his hands quite so dirty. One offers her romance; the other may offer her more.
